History of Windham County

No county in Vermont...excels Windham in point of scenic beauty, and none can equal it in historical interest. Nearly every mountain, river, and streamlet...has clustered about its name a wealth of historical lore.¹

This ode to Windham County appears in the 1884 Gazetteer of Windham County, and, no doubt, could be written about many places in Vermont.

The years preceding the creation of present-day Windham County were fraught with conflict and intrigue. There was a long-standing land claims dispute that began in 1741 between the Governors of New Hampshire and New York relating to all lands that lay to the west of the Connecticut River. Beginning in that year, Governor Benning Wentworth of New Hampshire issued land grants to New England families who wanted land. After the French-Indian War there was a large land rush to this area and grantees from New Hampshire were selling their plots. The issue was brought to the King of England and in 1764 he ruled against the New Hampshire grantees. New York began to issue grants to the disputed lands already occupied by those who took the New Hampshire grants. More violence and tension erupted in those years between the two groups that became known as the “Yorkers” and the “Granters.”²

In the middle of this dispute, the American Revolution began, and Vermont declared its independence on 2 July 1777 in Windsor, Vermont. When an independent Vermont organized its government in 1777-1778, it created two counties in the disputed land located in the southern part of the state. Bennington County on the west, which bordered New York, and Unity County on its east, which bordered the Connecticut River. The name of Unity was unpopular, so very soon after its declaration, the name was changed to Cumberland County, which was actually the old New York county name when New York claimed that part of the state.

The land dispute continued between two groups in the area, which actually personified the internal conflict of the Revolutionary War: the loyalist vs. the revolutionary cause.

The dispute continued throughout the War, but on 22 February 1781, Windham County was established by the now independent Republic of Vermont by taking Cumberland County on the eastern side and dividing it into three distinct counties: Windham County, Windsor County, and Orange County. This action did nothing to solve the dispute of conflicting claims, which continued to simmer for several more years. And in fact, in 1783, the disputes broke out into open rebellion between the two groups. This conflict was called the “Guilford War,” and it required a Vermont force lead by none other than Ethan Allen to tamp it down.³

The current boundaries of the county are the same now as when it was created. There have been no jurisdictional land disputes since the early one between New York and New Hampshire in the 1740s.

The County has 793 square miles, is the third largest county in the state, and is comprised of twenty-three towns. Fourteen Towns are derived from the original land grant from New Hampshire by Gov.

Benning Wentworth; seven towns are chartered by Vermont; and three towns are from New York and Massachusetts land patents.⁴

Windham County is presumed to be named from the town or county of Windham, Connecticut. The town was established in 1692 and the county in 1726 and from that area many citizens immigrated to this corner of Vermont. In 1787 the Town of Newfane was established as the “shire” town, or county seat.

Town Clerks

Although this document is to be a county locality guide, the fact remains that all vital records such as birth, death, marriage, and land records are held at the Town level in Vermont. After 1857 the State Legislature required all Towns to send copies of birth, marriages, and deaths to the Secretary of State. In 1896 the Legislature transferred the responsibility to the Vermont Department of Health.

Certified copies of certificates of birth, death, marriage, civil union, divorce and dissolution after 2012 may be ordered from that agency. For anything before 2011, those records must be requested from the Vermont State Archives and Records Administration.

An up-to-date Excel list of Windham County Town Clerks and County Clerks with mailing address, phone numbers, fax numbers, office hours, email address may be found at the Vermont Secretary of State's web site.

A handy brochure entitled Guide to Vermont Town Clerks, Treasurers, and County Clerks, (Montpelier, Vt.: Secretary of State, updated 26 February 2019)⁵ is also available online. This brochure also outlines costs for accessing public records.

Record Losses

The only record loss documented was a fire in 1946-47 in the Marlboro, Vermont, Town Clerk's office that destroyed mainly land records. However, the Town Clerk does not think there are huge gaps.⁸ A phone inquiry to the Vermont State Archives, Middlesex, Vermont, did not reveal any that they knew about.

Vermont State Archive Holdings for Windham County

The Vermont State Archives have five main online databases:

1. "Nye Index", which is an index to the Manuscript Vermont State Papers (c. 1760-1860) and other early Vermont records; <https://sos.vermont.gov/vsara/explore/people/nye-index/>
2. "Surveying Maps and Lotting Plans," This database is comprised of maps which are mainly "lotting plans." The lotting plans divided land among the proprietors of the town who were originally granted the land. Search under town name or historic name, e.g. Brattleboro or Brattleborough. <https://sos.vermont.gov/vsara/explore/places/lotting-plans/> .
- 3."Vt*Retain." A database of State Records born digital maintained by the Vermont State Archives. Browse>>Filter>>Jurisdiction, enter Windham County. <https://vermont.access.preservica.com/>
4. "Governors' Inaugural and Farewell Addresses." A Full text searchable archive which may be key word searched for mentions of "Windham County," or Windham County towns <https://sos.vermont.gov/vsara/research/executive-branch/state-officers/governors/inaugurals-farewells/>.

⁸ Forrest Holzapfel, Town Clerk, Marlboro, Vermont, to Jerry Carbone, e-mail, 25 April 2017, "Vital record losses in Marlboro," privately held by Carbone, Brattleboro, Vermont.

5 . "The Research Guide." The primary index of archival records in the Vermont State Archives. The following links were extracted for Windham County from the Vermont State Archives database.
